FARM POLITICS' POWER GROWING, SAYS EDUCATOR

Dr. Butterfield Expects Tighter Voting and Marketing Groups

AMHERST, Mass., July 30 (Special).—The next 30 years will see far more organized political action on the part of farmers than has yet developed," said Kenyon L. Butterfield, president of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, last evening at the first general session of "Farm and Home Week." His speech closed the day for more than 1000 farmers, homemakers and commercial men interested in agriculture.

Today the dairy and poultry programs and the feed dealers interests of Massachusetts will be presented. Dairymen from southern New England are here for these meetings, hoping that at this time this college and the Vermont college of agriculture which sends one of its faculty, Prof. E. H. Ellisberger to the sessions, will state in detail their position on New England's milk marketing.

Chief of the poultrymen's program is Prof. W. C. Thompson of the New Jersey college of agriculture who will discuss the world's poultry congress at Barcelona, Spain, and what it means to Europe and America. Commercial poultry marketing in New England will be advocated by James C. Farmer of the New Hampshire Department of Agriculture and analyzed by Dr. R. J. McCall of this institution. The fruit men again will hear from Prof. J. H. Gourley, this time on pollination in the modern orchard. They also will hear J. H. Putnam of Greenfield on holding New England's apple markets.

The feed dealers who have accepted the invitation of the extension service to meet here are coming especially to hear John D. Willard, director of that service, on the relations between feed dealers and farmers in credit and deliveries. In presenting the problems of education as he has seen them Dr. Butterfield said:

We are just beginning to appreciate the importance of farm extension and planning farm production and marketing for a coming season. We will find that the mutual interests of producers and consumers will eventually iron out the difficulties and make a visible difference between them. This will be accomplished largely by organization. Fifty years ago in this country, many failures, Europe's successful experience in these lines and renewed efforts have given greatly to us the value of the modern business world.

But farmers must combine for more than selfish economic ends. They must develop community strength. Then they can study the question of peace, racial antagonisms, and pool their efforts in solving such issues. I think that farmers who constitute two-thirds of the world's population, although they have not two-thirds of the influence on this earth, are more naturally set in the future than any other group. Yet no group probably has less discussion on these themes than farmers.

I believe that the next three decades will bring them face to face with these larger issues, and that farm organizations will take greater political strides, that heretofore. Farmers education is a constant problem. Yearly new knowledge is being discovered and new applications of science are being worked out. The farmer must learn these, for they are his light. Never has there been so much discussion on the principles, methods, and aims of college education as there is today. Both strong doubts and certain convictions have been advanced on this question.

I have been somewhat disappointed in the South-High schools of which we have several in this State. These county agricultural schools, I think, should turn out 10

Boston Man to Be Special Assistant to Federal Attorney-General

Special from Monitor Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 30—Harlan Fiske Stone, Attorney-General, today announced the appointment, upon the recommendation of Mabel W. Willibrand, Assistant Attorney-General, of John J. Byrne as special assistant to the Attorney-General, to have general charge of prohibition prosecutions under the national act in the territory comprising the New England States.

Mr. Byrne, who is a native of Boston, for the last three years has been law clerk to William H. Taft, Chief Justice of the United States.

The Government won 37 of the 39 prohibition cases taken on appeal from the federal courts to the Supreme Court of the United States, 29 of the cases being petitions for writs of certiorari, of which the Government lost only one according to a report submitted today to Mr. Stone by Mrs. Willibrand, covering the period of the October term of the Supreme Court ended in June.

The Government's viewpoint, won by the Department of Justice, Mrs. Willibrand stated, was that in which it was decreed that beer and liquor could not be prescribed for medicinal purposes. In these cases, one arising in the eastern and two in the southern district of New York, the Supreme Court sustained the Government's contention that Congress had full power under the Eighteenth Amendment to prohibit the manufacture, sale and distribution of intoxicating malt liquors for medicinal purposes.

Another case of importance won by the Government was that of Heister vs. the United States, involving the right of search and seizure. While the courts carefully have guarded the rights of the people under the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution, directed against "unreasonable search and seizure," Mrs. Willibrand says, they have not allowed the privileges granted by it to be enlarged by those who seek to violate the law.

So, in the Heister case, in which the evidence upon which conviction was based was found on defendant's premises but some distance from the dwelling, the court held that "the protection accorded by the Fourth Amendment to the people in their persons, houses, papers, and effects," is not extended to the open fields.

Of two cases on the docket before the Supreme Court on certificate, the Kennedy case, which arose in Osage County, Okla., was disposed of. That country being Indian country, traffic in liquors has been prohibited there for almost 100 years, except to the Indians.

Viewing the Indians as wards of the Government, Congress long ago provided heavy penalties for those who dared to bring liquor into Indian country. The Supreme Court declared that Indian liquor statutes are still in effect and so apply to Osage County.

Strict Enforcement Seen in Concentrated Authority

Concentrated improvement of prohibition enforcement through decentralization of prosecutions against violators of the Eighteenth Amendment is seen in the appointment of John J. Byrne as director-general of prosecutions in New England and in the expectation that similar appointments for other regions soon will be made.

This is looked on as a move from the Attorney-General's headquarters in Washington to relieve federal district attorneys of prohibition cases and to strengthen the enforcement of the law by putting officials with full authority in strategic positions throughout the United States.

Mr. Byrne, who for the last three years has been secretary to William H. Taft, Chief Justice of the United States, will be responsible directly for the work.

FOREIGN POLICY HAS VITAL PART IN DAVIS SPEECH

Democratic Candidate Returns to New York Fit for Fray—Holds Conference

Special from Monitor Bureau

DARK HARBOR, ISLESBORO, Me., July 30 (AP)—John W. Davis, Democratic presidential nominee, will start back to New York late today. He carries the draft of his acceptance address, the product of his labors in Maine. It will be delivered 10 days hence at Clarkburg, West Va., probably from the veranda of the Davis home.

It is reported that the nominee will assail the record of the Republican Administration as disclosed in Senate investigations and will charge President Coolidge and other Republican leaders with what the Democrats have claimed was reluctance in permitting full disclosures in Senate inquiries.

Next in importance will be the discussion of agricultural affairs. His friends say that the Democratic candidate will denounce the record of the Harding-Coolidge Administration. Of little less importance will be the discussion of international relief. Mr. Davis is inclined, say his intimate friends, to be very liberal in his treatment of the subject and they would not be surprised if he goes further than does the Democratic platform.

The candidate is known to regard that section of the farm plank referring to the restoration of the foreign markets for American farm products somewhat vague. He believes a specific means of accomplishing this end should be set before the country.

As it is in the platform, the Ku Klux Klan issue probably will be dealt with generally under the subject of religious liberty. So far as the Democratic ranks themselves are concerned this is regarded by many party leaders as one of the most delicate of the many subjects to be treated.

Taxation and tariff will be other major topics of the address. Other subjects taken up in the platform are likely to be dealt with in a rather general way.

BOMB CASE FACTS TO BE SOUGHT BY A NEUTRAL GROUP

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 30.—The committee of five appointed yesterday by the executive committee of the Republican State Central Committee for the purpose of investigating the charges that have been made regarding the placing of the bridge gas bomb in the Rhode Island Senate Chamber on the morning of June 19, will have its first meeting tomorrow.

At this meeting the committee will originate and plan a program to be followed in the investigation. It has been instructed to make. Members of the committee, which consists of Felix Hebert of West Warwick, George Butler of Westerly, Isaac Gill of Pawtucket, Robert L. Kelly of Barrington, and Mrs. Max Levy of Newport, declined to discuss their probable course today, but they declared their intention to conduct as thorough an investigation as possible, and to announce their findings.

MOOSE ELECT W. A. MARAKLE NEW DICTATOR

Special from Monitor Bureau

NEW YORK, July 30.—During the coming year, the Loyal Order of Moose will concentrate its maximum effort in discovering the efficiency of retired members and removing all false stigma of "charity" in connection with the institution.

Moosehaven, Fla., where suitable employment for all residents is being found, according to a statement made today by John W. Ford of Philadelphia, Pa., chairman of the national executive committee.

With the success of Mooseheart, Ill., the provision for children is a demonstrated success, and the important activity of the Moose being discussed at the present convention is the abolishment of the "idea that anyone has reached the age of usefulness," Mr. Ford said.

For the last year and three months, the establishment of Moosehaven has flourished. Each one of the members who live in it are engaged in some constructive work.

Each one receives a salary so that he can pay for his board and room and have a little surplus.

Mr. Ford then related a few individual cases where Moosehaven residents had found occupation as truck gardeners, electricians, engineers and carpenters or whatever their experience warranted, after falling to find employment in other cities.

In one or two instances where they were not suited to labor they are designated officially "to keep their minds at work," Mr. Ford said.

With the election of Willard A. Marakle of Rochester as supreme dictator to succeed Frank J. Monahan of San Francisco, the convention prepared to pick the remaining officers of the order who do not advance automatically.

WHISTLE BLASTS GOVERN TRAFFIC

The traffic signals that the police of Boston have been using lately are new incorporations into the street commission's traffic regulations as a result of a conference yesterday between Thomas F. Goode, Deputy Superintendent of Police, and Capt. Benjamin Hoppen and John H. L. Noyes, street commissioner.

The whistle signals are as follows: One blast indicates the fact that the traffic shall stop and pedestrians cross. Two blasts means that a change is about to take place. Traffic policemen will give signs by hand following the whistle signals. Three or more blasts is the emergency signal indicating the approach of fire apparatus, or any other emergency.

It was also decided that no vehicle except a street car shall pass through a safety zone that has been established by the street commissioners.

NEW HAMPSHIRE FARMS PEOPLED

Canadians Entering State—Shoe Factories to Come

MANCHESTER, N. H., July 30 (Special).—Two changes of marked importance in the economic life of New Hampshire are noticeable this summer, the immigration of farmers from the eastern provinces of Canada and the moving of shoe factories from Massachusetts cities into rural New Hampshire towns.

Both movements are increasing the population and prosperity of the State and are being encouraged by representative New Hampshire people.

The cause of Canadian immigration is said to be the acute agricultural depression in the provinces of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward's Island and New Brunswick, out of which in 1923 the total emigration to the United States was 200,000 or more than the European immigration under the present law.

Nearly all of these Canadians who have moved over the border into New Hampshire, Maine and Vermont have been farmers and they have settled upon American farms.

New Hampshire people look with favor upon them as valuable material to repopulate some of the vacant farms which have in themselves become a problem in New England rural life.

The Canadian settlers speak English and are accustomed to the same sort of farm life and farming operations, as well as to the same form of local government, as prevailed in their former homes. They have moved into New Hampshire communities and adjusted themselves to new surroundings with as great facility as native Americans move from one state to another.

It is said that other states into which these Canadians are going in numbers are Michigan, Oregon and California. But the advantages of New Hampshire are being broadcast through Chambers of Commerce, granges and similar organizations and the argument is advanced that it costs less to come to this State and that here the conditions are most like those of the provinces.

An additional incentive is found in many families from the fact that they are descended from the emigrants of Revolutionary days who went by thousands from New Hampshire to the maritime provinces in order to show their loyalty to Great Britain.

One of those who led many out of this State in 1775 and succeeding years was John Wentworth, Governor of New Hampshire, who upon being expelled by the Revolutionary forces became Governor of the British province of Nova Scotia for many years.

The accompanying movement of population from Massachusetts has no connection with that which has been cited above, but is caused by the determination of shoe manufacturers to seek places in rural communities where there are fewer labor troubles and lower costs of living.

Reward of Rose Pilgrimages Found in Beauties of Nature, Not Mechanical Pleasures

Ramblers Coloring Summer Homes of North and South Shores Promise Views of Rare
Charm and Escape Bond of Artificiality

Newspaper editors believe it their duty to print "hot weather specials." Consequently there is an established custom, as summer draws near, of diligently collecting copy and illustrations which as the years pass tend toward standardization.

There is a pretty well defined cycle of such "specials." The city bathing pool, where the children of its ghetto ride the carousels of the feed pipe as they would ride silver-shod ponies in some fantastic fable. The rumbling ice cart with its queue of eager children hanging on the charity and good humor of the ice-man who sooner or later can be induced by persistence to find chunks he can do without. There are the annual whimsical stories, decorated with pictures of bored white bears clambering forth from chilly water to blocks of ice. It is customary to caption such pictures, with fine irony, "Solid comfort."

This year there are amazing pictures of the second depot established by the Mt. Everest Expedition. Towering walls of ice with campers huddling in the foreground over small fires. There are the customary pictures, too, of refrigerating plant interiors, with stalactites of ice hanging from the pipes and frost rimming the visors of workmen's caps. Motion picture actors, on location in vast reaches of snow and ice, engaged in making next winter's screen releases, are an addition to the cycle.

So much for the artificial. There is a real warm weather story, needing no sense of irony or subtlety to build it, a story of summer roses. Roses come with summer sunshine and showers, with golden dawns and lilac twilights. It isn't hard to find them and the searching helps the public to write its own story.

Hot weather takes people by thousands to the public beaches where the squeal and whine of roller coasters and popcorn machines and the jingling bells and cymbals of the merry-go-round infer the most laborious means of finding amusement. Why not a pilgrimage for roses at dawn or evening with the same industry and certainly less labor. To exchange the spectacle of still gardens filled with a thousand dewy bouquets for the rakish, saucy clusters of artificial lights and flamboyant unsuitables is obviously a worthy occupation.

Rose Pilgrimages

The rose season—whether they be ramblers which are at their very height or the single roses of quaint gardens that will continue yet for weeks—is the royal prize of summer. Along the north and south shores, against picket fences and trellises and quaint, peaceful houses there are to be seen the flaming garlands of crimson and pink ramblers, the red roses on triumphant briers, and the "white rosebuds for gardeners" to which Browning pays such charming tribute. And the reward for searching them out is a long remembered perfume and a memory of unforgettable beauty.

If there is no opportunity to motor, the street car takes visitors by the hundred each day to Franklin Park. And at Franklin Park there is the municipal garden, containing scores of varieties of roses and eminently worth seeing.

The famous Lawson estate in Egypt is in process of being divided for small homes. The white fences criss-crossing it still bear many crimson ramblers. Through the still interior reaches of the great estate one comes infrequently on a bush merging its bright fires with the green shadows of field grass. The Rose Cottage and a cottage on the opposite corner of the beautiful, shaded main street, are brilliantly decorated with the nodding plumes of crimson and rose and pink, enriching the scene with green of the catalpas that whisper over the flagged walks to the dusky front doors.

Further away, near Greenbush, is the home of Albert Garceau, with its shimmering carpet of emerald grass and its picket fence with the arched, quaint gateway wholly hidden in ramblers that are at the very height of their loveliness. In a cleft of the lawn just within the gateway, is a well weep, what little that remains uncovered of its timber silver with age. The rest is wrapped in ivy, and a carefully trained rambler that cases the timber like a carefully embroidered sheath, rose and ivory and deep green.

Behind the house, that is painted mellow ochre, is an old-fashioned garden where amethyst flowers glimmer in the lengthening shadows, and the grapevine over a white pergola twists a little to show the silver lining of its leaves. And there are other roses there, too—saffron and white and the pink that is like bleached coral. There are trees, too. Eliot wrote

"... when we want
To have more roses we must plant more trees."

Films and sycamores rise high about the house, etched against a metallic sky like giant plumes of uncured ostrich. There are young trees, too. And some day probably there will be many more roses, because of the trees. But there are many now, that are like a whispered benediction through the heat of the trees.

forth that the company still owes the State of Connecticut nearly $802,000 in overdue and unpaid taxes, of which it is required to pay on account in July, 1924, in com-unpaid.

The company also owes an assess-

DYESTUFF RULING AFFECTS IMPORTS

Latitude Granted in Regard to Price Information

Importers of dyestuffs and the dyestuff trade in general are interested in the decision of the United States Treasury Department, just announced, which amends the regulations covering importations of coal tar products. Under this amendment it will be possible for importers to get advice from customs officials on the value at which both competitive and noncompetitive dyes should be entered. Heretofore, the appraisers were authorized to give importers information as to American selling prices of competitive dyes, but forbade it in the case of noncompetitive colors.

The new amendment revokes section C of regulation 4, issued March 3, 1923, and alters section B, so that it now reads:

In the case of an actual importation of a similar competitive article, or of a non-competitive article, the appraising officer may furnish to the importer, upon application in writing, information of the American selling price or United States value, as the case may be, provided the appraising officer shall be satisfied that the importer, after exercising due diligence, has not himself been able to obtain such information and that he has submitted to the appraising officer all relevant information in his possession. All information furnished by the appraising officer shall be advisory only. In communicating such American selling price or United States value, however, the appraising officer shall not disclose the source of his information.

The greatest benefit of the new ruling, in the opinion of importers, is likely to be the elimination of penalties incurred by importers for undervaluation on imported dyes. In the past, importers have repeatedly requested that they receive the same information regarding noncompetitive dyes that they have regarding competitive colors. They contended that different importers sell at different prices and as duty must be assessed at the highest price calculated on United States value, it has been impossible to know whether a low-price importer is technically undervaluing his importation.

G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT PLANS

Gen. Gaylord M. Seltzger of Van Wert, O., commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, is expected to arrive in Boston, with his staff Thursday, Aug. 7, to complete arrangements for the national encampment of that organization, Aug. 10 to 16. The committee on automobiles reports that many cars are needed for the use of veterans on the day of the parade, Aug. 12, and on historic day, Aug. 14. Persons willing to lend their cars are asked to send word to Fred E. Bolton, Room 305, City Hall Annex. A clam bake at Plymouth, an exhibition drill by Boston fire boats and trips to Lexington and Concord are among the entertainment features planned.

Lewis and Clark Cavern Closed for Lack of Funds

Montana Limestone Cave Will Be Open When
National Park Service Can Provide Guides

Butte, Mont. Special Correspondence. A FEW miles from the main line of the Yellowstone Trail is one of America's national monuments, awaiting congressional appropriation that may make it accessible to the touring public. The Lewis and Clark Cavern, high above the Jefferson River Cañon, approximately 60 miles east of Butte, has a bewildering wealth of stalactites and stalagmites, declared by travelers to be unmatched among any caves they have explored. The national park service, however, has decided that the cavern should be kept closed until such time as sufficient funds are available to install a proper lighting system and to maintain guides and guards to protect the picturesque features.

In reply to an inquiry concerning prospects of opening the place to visitors this summer, the assistant director of the national park service wrote in part from Washington, D. C.:

"The Lewis and Clark Cavern is too beautiful a thing to be allowed to be ruined by thoughtless visitors breaking off the stalactites and stalagmites formations for souvenirs. Until we can put in a protective force of guides we will have to keep the monument closed to the general public."

Open to Geology Class. The geology class of the Montana State School of Mines was permitted this spring to visit the cavern under faculty supervision, but no other party has been sanctioned for nearly two years.

The cavern, formerly known as Morrison's Cave, is within precipitous limestone cliffs that rise above the narrow shelf on which the Northern Pacific Railroad line runs through Jefferson Cañon. The mouth of the cave is near the summit, 1200 feet higher than the river level.

In 1905 George Morrison, according to the story told of the discovery, was tramping in the vicinity, and noticing a large opening in the side of the hill near the top, he tested it by dropping stones. He could hear the reverberations of their fall far down within the mountain, and a few days later returned with his brother John, carrying 400 feet of rope and a supply of candles and matches. He attached the rope to himself and clambered down as his brother passed out the line. The explorer made his way down a long shelf slanting to an abrupt pitch, at the base of which he found his feet resting on solid ground. Here he was able for the first time to light a candle.

The initial view gave an impression that must have been akin to that of Aladdin when he first saw the gems glittering on the trees of Oriental legend. Marvelous crystal formations in columns and stalagmites and thickets of stalactites gleamed with the sheen of satin under the flickering light as he made his way from chamber to chamber, finally arriving through a narrow aperture into the great domed room, since known as "The Cathedral." At last he retraced his steps and found the rope, by which he climbed back to the opening, with his brother's aid.

The discovery was reported to D. A. Morrison, uncle of the boys, and he had a rope ladder made by which more extensive exploration could be undertaken. He was one of the directors of a lime company operating near the place, and entered a mineral claim on the land. Meantime he proceeded to make access easier. A new entrance was tunneled from the hillside, and stairways and ladders were installed.

Roosevelt's Proclamation. The Government, however, refused to issue a patent, on the ground that a natural wonder of this kind should be held in trust for the people, rather than be deeded to an individual or a corporation. President Roosevelt, by executive proclamation in 1908, set it aside as a national monument.

A survey was ordered, and it was found that the tract lay within the Northern Pacific land grant. That company relinquished its claims in favor of the Government, and, by a second proclamation in 1911, President Taft placed the cavern under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service under the name of Lewis and Clark Cavern.

The nearest point on the railroad is Danmor siding, just at the eastern end of the great slope leading up to the cliff. A winding roadwye through a gulch leads to an extensive and steep meadow below the precipice itself. The railroad siding is at an elevation of 4250 feet, and the mouth of the cave is 5450 feet above sea level. The bottom of the cavern, so far as it has been explored, is 300 feet lower.

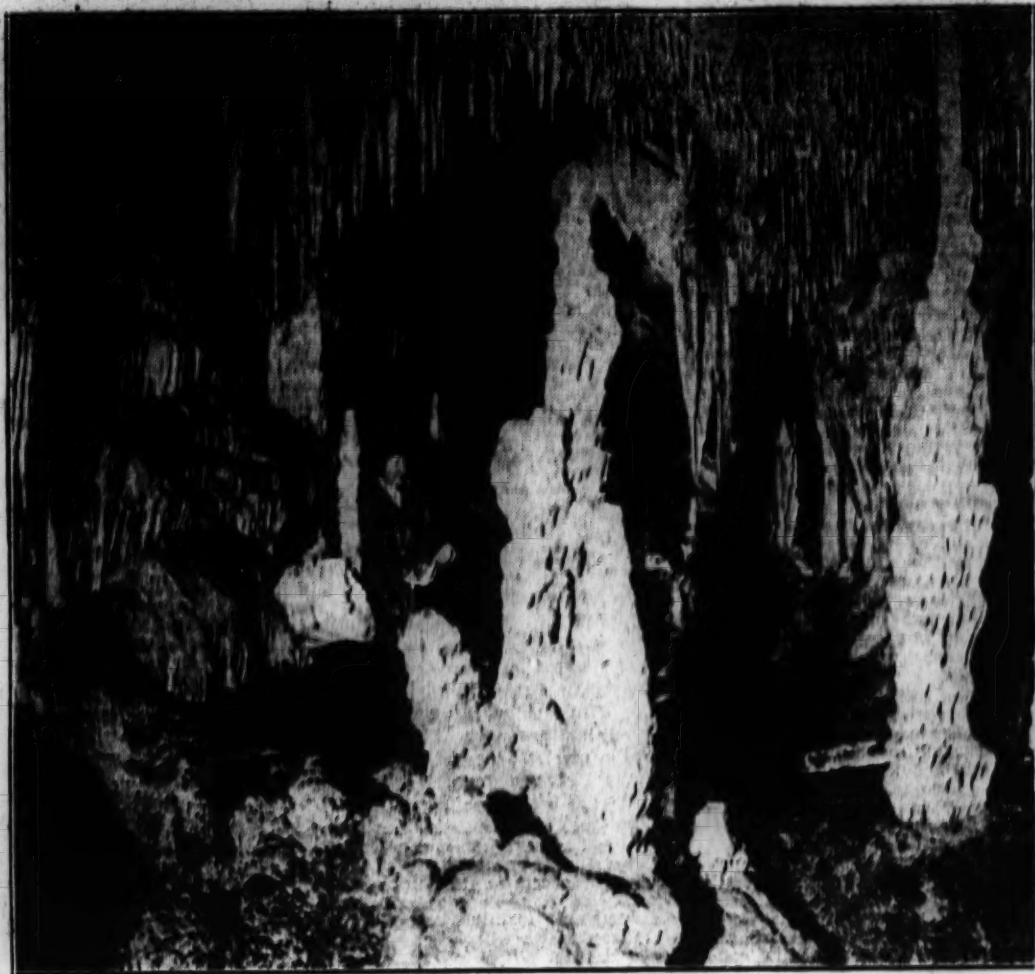

From the entrance substantial USE LETTER PATTERNS. For better, neater sign and show cards. These letters are perfectly cut and rapid cutting, speed and neatness. Excellent aid for engraving, wood and metal. To the old timer, desirable to the new. Send stamp for sample. J. F. RAN, 2835 Greenview Ave., Chicago opening the cavern to the general public is an adequate corps of custodians to prevent breaking away of the stalactites. It is estimated that the growth is one-sixteenth of an inch in 40 years, and the formations which are the result of nature's cave through which might be ruined by active vandals within an hour. The experience of this kind in Mammoth Cave of Kentucky and other places has shown that responsible for this national monument that no chances can be taken with the thoughtless souvenir hunter. Yet every transcontinental tourist of the thousands who use the Yellowstone Trail yearly would be amply repaid for influence exerted to obtain appropriations that would make the monument accessible to the public, with a branch highway of a few miles and a public camp site in the meadow below the cliff. For such visitors the cavern would remain one of the most striking memorials in a drip through the Rockies.

In Nature's Art Gallery, Lewis and Clark Cavern

Geology Class of Montana State School of Mines Permitted to Visit National Monument for Study of Stalactites and Stalagmites

verges. One branch leads to what is called "The Bridal Chamber." Here stalactites, literally myriad in number, glorify the ceiling and walls with a tapestry of crystalline rock, dainty and delicate as lace hangings. On other walls of the passage are thickly fluted formations symmetrical as a pipe organ, one of the most striking being what is known as "The Frozen Waterfall."

Along the other branch of this level, a short climb down a ladder leads to what is aptly dubbed "The Fat Man's Misery." A thin woman, if she attempt the trip with the encumbrance of skirts, shares the misery. It is a long, low passage, with stalagmites offering some foothold for the twisting climb over slippery slopes, while stalactites hang low overhead. But the amazing glories just beyond repay the troubles in the arduous path to them. The vaulted roof opens in a sweeping curve, and in a nook of the wall is a miniature lake of ice-cold water, strongly flavored with lime.

The diameter of the cathedral chamber is 125 feet on the average, with a height of 50 feet at the apex of the fretted roof. The floor is broken by gigantic stalagmites in bewildering numbers and formations. One huge column, four feet in diameter, lies like a fallen tree beside the stump from which it was broken by a disturbance in prehistoric ages. Others tower in semblance of fountains and monoliths, carved and grouped in suggestions of altars and choir lofts, with statuary in niches curtained by stalactite screens.

THIRD-CLASS OCEAN TRAVEL MADE ATTRACTIVE TO PUBLIC

Steamship Lines, Faced by Lowered Immigration
Business, Building Up New Patronage

Approximately 10,000 students, teachers, professional people, young business men and their families, have taken advantage of the new third-class cabin passage arrangements of the various transatlantic steamship companies, so far this season.

Under the new immigration restriction laws, the steamship companies have encountered difficulties in making the operation of their vessels profitable. Westbound transatlantic liners bring very few aliens.

Atlantic have been designated for this class of travel, with a few extra attractions provided for the third-class passengers.

Special Tours Arranged. Rates, however, have not been cut. It is simply a question of making the third-class travel on certain vessels more nearly as attractive as the first-class, with the exception of luxuries.

The round trip from Boston to European ports in the third-class cabin of the restricted liners is $165, including meals and berths. Special tours have also been arranged in Europe, whereby the participants follow certain routes, but at a little less expense than if they took these same routes individually. These are not compulsory, however.

Before the war, first-class passage on the large liners ranged from $85 to $100 each way, depending on the type of room desired. Today the third-class rate is a little more than that.

Certain professional types of Americans have hesitated to renew their old custom of European travel at the increased cost, but now that the third-class has been restricted, with the rates nearer to pre-war first-class rates, large numbers have been induced to tour abroad again.

Other travelers, however, who do not reckon expense as closely, continue to use first class. This type of liner will dock in BOSTON SUNDAY

New Ship City of Venice Sails
From Liverpool Aug. 20

Two transatlantic passenger liners are due to arrive at and sail from Boston next Sunday, both making this port en route to or from New York. The White Star liner Cedric from Liverpool and Queenstown, is due to reach Commonwealth Pier with 21 first-class, 29 second-class and 61 third-class passengers to be discharged here, while about the same number will remain on board to embark at New York.

The Samaria is due from New York Sunday to embark about 80 first-class, 140 second, and 200 third-class passengers, and will sail immediately for Queenstown and Liverpool.

Some of the passengers coming from abroad on the Cedric are aliens who have obtained the new form of visa blanks required by the new immigration laws from the American consulate in Europe. Relatively few of these have come, this far, however, although the law permits about 15,000 aliens to enter the United States during the current fiscal year beginning July 1.

Announcement is made by the local office of the White Star Line that the new steamer City of Venice of the Ellerman-City Line will sail from Liverpool for Boston Aug. 20 in the service of the White Star Line, bringing about 100 cabin passengers.

Belfast (Me.) Pageant Traces City's History

Ox Cart Used by Early Settlers and Eighteenth Century Carriage Among Exhibit Features

BELFAST, Me., July 29 (Special).—In the historical pageant held in this city for which hundreds of former residents have returned, a carriage built in the 18th century was used. This carriage, now the property of Bernes O. Norton, was given as a wedding present to a Warren bride and was later the property of Gen. Henry Knox at his Thomaston estate. It has been exhibited in Philadelphia, Boston and other cities. The Rev. W. P. Skerry, pastor of the First Church, Imperador, the Rev. Alfred Johnson, sonated the Rev. Alfred Johnson in the new group which commemorated the organization of the church more than 100 years ago. Mrs. Maud E. Busse, who took part in the early settlers' parade, wore a red cape which belonged to her great grandmother, an early settler.

There was an ox cart carrying some of the early settlers, those taking the parts being Herbert Black and the granddaughter, Mrs. Annie Black Partridge; two great-granddaughters, Mrs. Emma Crocker and Mrs. Abbie Black, and one great-grandson, Mrs. Ruth Dinwiddie, who took the character of Miss Belfast, the fifth generation of the descendants of Noah and Helay Prudden, to be born in Waldo County, while Telford Durham is the sixth lineal descendant of one of the proprietors of Belfast, whose name he bears.

The arrival of the early settlers was an interesting sight, coming in with their household goods. A ox cart camp for the night and preparing the evening meal around the fire. The skulking Indians, such a menace to the safety of those pioneers of Waldo County, were enacted by the Tribe of Red Men. Another pleasing feature was the dancing of the Virginia reel in old-time fashion. The pageant is being held under the auspices of the Belfast Historical Society.

NEW LONDON TO SEE
LITTLE OF PRINCE
NEW LONDON, Conn., July 30.—Baron Houthouff of London, former Civil Lord of the British Admiralty, has been here for several days arranging for the visit of the Prince of Wales in September. He left for New York City today. According to present arrangements, New London will see little of the royal visitor. After he attends the polo matches at Meadowbrook, a visit will bring the Prince here. A special Canadian Pacific train will be waiting on the Million Dollar Pier, and the royal guest will step from the ship to his apartment car, which will take him to Canada.

TWO COMPANIES SIGN
HAVERHILL, Mass., July 29 (Special).—The L. M. Leavitt Counter Company and the H. W. Leavitt Counter Company have signed a contract for the largest show counter makers in the city and both independent of the Manufacturers Association. They signed one-year wage and working agreements with the Haverhill Protective Union on the existing rates. Agreements with all counter manufacturers in the city end on Thursday, and the union has refused to accept the manufacturers' proposal to reduce wages 12 1/2 per cent.

From Police Judge to President

It cannot be too constantly reiterated that the whole strategy of those who would undo the prohibition policy of the United States is to encourage violations of the law and then point to those violations, which they have themselves fomented, as evidence that the law cannot be enforced.

Against this the retort of those who believe in the prohibition policy is to lay emphasis on the steady improvement in methods of enforcement, and to declare that, just in proportion as officials are secured who will not co-operate with the lawless elements, enforcement will become increasingly effective.

Notable evidence in support of this proposition is furnished by the report made yesterday by Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, the very efficient Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, in charge of prohibition enforcement. Mrs. Willebrandt reports that during the October term of the United States Supreme Court, which ended in June, the Government won thirty-seven out of thirty-nine prohibition cases, and that of twenty-nine petitions for writs of certiorari the Government lost only one. It was during this session of the court that the Government won its contention that beer and other malt liquors cannot be prescribed for medical purposes.

To that record of almost complete success in the highest court in the land may be added the report of the experiences of the United States Attorney in Chicago, E. A. Olson, in the lesser federal courts. Among other achievements, Mr. Olson reports that more than $25,000,000 worth of buildings have been padlocked for a year because of conviction of their use for selling liquor; that eighteen breweries have been finally closed; that millions of dollars' worth of beer has been emptied into the sewers; that more than 2000 bootleggers have been convicted, being an average of 99 out of every 100 against whom information has been lodged; and finally, that crimes against the Government have decreased fully one-third during the past year.

Mr. Olson puts his finger on the danger point in the enforcement campaign. He points out that wherever politics becomes involved, enforcement is handicapped, if not defeated. The judges of a federal court, being appointed for life, are free from extraneous political influences, and their record in enforcement cases is, therefore, on the whole a high one. But state judges, always mindful that they must seek re-election, are inclined to pander to the liquor sentiment. This does not by any means imply that a majority of the electorate approves such abject surrender to illegal influences; it means only, as Mr. Olson says: "The honest majority does not interest itself. The people that want beer keep on the watch, and sharpen their hatchets for the man who opposes."

The United States Supreme Court, therefore, is steadily sustaining prohibition enforcement at practically every point brought to its attention. Active officials, even in a great city like Chicago, have demonstrated that the law can be enforced. Where it fails, it fails because of the alliance of timid and self-seeking politicians with a politically active and coherent body of wets. It is the task, therefore, of those interested in the maintenance of this great national policy, and determined to give to it its fullest effect, to educate the masses of the people to their plain duty in the premises. Judges and prosecuting attorneys who do their duty should be supported at the polls. Those who traffic with the enemy should be actively and effectively opposed. This rule applies not merely to the ordinary police judge in a great city, but even to the distinguished candidate for the President of the United States—if there should be one—who has allied himself with the liquor power, or failed to declare himself unequivocally in support of prohibition.

Giving the Dominions a Voice

CANADA had to exercise pressure before the Government in Great Britain found it possible to include dominion representation on the British delegation to the interallied conference in London. The fact is that some other countries object to the inclusion of dominion representatives at such conferences. They regard the presence of dominion delegates as tending to give Great Britain too much representation. But when it became apparent to Canada that the Lausanne Conference mistake seemed about to be repeated, of ministers in Great Britain trying to represent the interests of the whole British Commonwealth, instead of including ministers from the overseas dominions, Canada's vigorous claim for representation had the required effect.

It is quite possible to allow the dominions to participate, while at the same time meeting the objections of other countries. As at the original Peace Conference, and at the Washington Conference on the Limitation of Armament, the British Commonwealth employed a panel system of selecting representatives. Only three British delegates could be selected to sit at the conference table at any one meeting. But the British delegation could consist of any number of representatives, including delegates from the self-governing dominions, from whom the three principal delegates for the day would be selected. At Versailles, the whole British Commonwealth delegation met in council to agree as to how many, and who of their number, should appear at the different sessions of the conference, to discuss the matters that were before the representatives of the several nations then assembled. Every British representative carried with him full powers from the King with respect to the dominion or the part of the Empire which he represented. All had like powers to speak touching matters of policy which had been agreed upon by the British Commonwealth delegation through its members conferring with each other in separate conference for the purpose of determining policy.

At the interallied conference, the desire of Ramsay MacDonald, the British Prime Minister, to have the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Philip Snowden, associated with him, seemed to leave only one other seat available for division among all the self-governing dominions. But even while representation at the conference table is thus restricted, the system of conferring full powers from the King upon all the dominion delegates does place the ministers from overseas on an equal footing with the ministers from Great Britain in the separate conferences of the British Commonwealth delegates.

The Colonial Secretary, J. H. Thomas, in a recent speech which welcomed the inclusion of the dominion representatives, said: "But the whole question of representation of the dominions will have to be tackled." It is hoped, the Colonial Secretary added, that before the end of the year there will be another meeting in London between ministers of Great Britain and of the dominions, to adopt a plan which will insure the full status and right of the dominions to take part in matters affecting their interests as well as Great Britain's. In the meanwhile the dominions have the precedent established at Versailles and followed at Washington, as well as the resolution at the Imperial Conference in London last year, to sustain them in the stand they take for representation with full powers at conferences which affect the interests of the whole British Commonwealth.

The Old Diplomacy and the New

FROM the beginning of time humanity has been fond of finding scapegoats when things have gone wrong, and, sure enough, when the Great War burst upon the world, all nations, allied and enemy alike, agreed to make a scapegoat of the old diplomacy. Nothing was too bad to be said against it. It was a system of organized deception and intrigue. It was manned by a suave but sinister class of persons who delighted in pulling wool over the eyes of the public and in stirring up trouble between nations. One indignant observer of their ways went so far as to describe diplomats as men sent abroad to lie for their country.

Fortunately, perhaps, the public today is in a more tolerant mood. Indeed, diplomats have rather come back into favor. The change is probably due to closer acquaintance with the methods and results of the new diplomacy. The new diplomacy had its great innings at Paris. Everybody was to take a hand at making peace, except the old diplomats. Newspaper correspondents, who had scarcely ever left their own home town, became authorities about distant scenes which they had blessed with their investigating presence for a few hectic hours. Politicians who had thrived for years by appealing to the provincialism of voters threw out—with the ease and confidence with which they had previously uttered campaign promises—solutions for problems which had baffled the statesmen of the world for decades. And the unfortunate beings who were constitutionally responsible for making the peace were compelled to go about their task with an amount of publicity, and in the limelight of sensational criticism and innuendo, which was in inverse ratio to the secrecy which their predecessors had enjoyed.

It was probably a good thing that the world went through the experience of trying to conduct diplomacy by the methods of a political convention. The new diplomacy was as conspicuously unsuccessful in making a peace after the war as the old diplomacy had been unsuccessful in preserving the peace before the war. People were thus brought back to a sense of proportion. Diplomacy, after all, is a purely practical art. It is the function of transacting business and keeping the peace between sovereign nations which are completely independent of one another. Its methods must be judged by their success in attaining that practical end.

The old diplomacy was the inexorable outcome of the condition of thinking of the peoples themselves. Nations lived in entirely water-tight compartments. Every state was an end in itself. It felt but little obligation toward other states, and was largely animated by fear, suspicion or resentment toward them. In such conditions, diplomatic relations were inevitably secretive and suspicious, and the latent hostility was covered over by an elaborate regard for ceremonial etiquette and prestige.

The war broke down, for the time being, all reserves between the Allies. United as they were in a common purpose, a mutual interest and a mutual confidence arose which made absurd the ritual of the old diplomacy and made natural the more human and the more unconventional methods of the new diplomacy. But the war only brought about a temporary unity. The fundamental differences between the nations remained unchanged. Once the common end had been achieved, they returned to their self-centered thinking. And inevitably their methods of the older diplomacy, moderated from their previous formalism, began to reappear. The endless procession of international conferences came to an end, the newspaper embassies and the amateur diplomatists disappeared, the professionals came back, and diplomatic notes took the place of speeches.

None the less, the foundations for a better diplomacy are being steadily laid, all the time. This year has seen a torrent of international gatherings of every sort and kind, such as has never been witnessed in history before. There have been international conventions of advertisers and business men and lawyers. There have been gatherings of educationists and religious leaders. There have been great assemblies of athletes and sightseers at Paris and Wembley. It is these gatherings which are the real foundation of the new diplomacy, for they are bringing together the ordinary citizens of all countries on the ground of their common work and interest, and breaking down those walls of ignorance and suspicion which have hitherto separated them. Once the foundations for confidence and understanding between the rank and file of the peoples have been laid, a new and better system of international intercourse will automatically follow.

A Dog Goes to Prison

THE decision reached by Governor Baxter of Maine to send a favorite white collie dog to prison at Thomaston to be a companion and friend to those sentenced to confinement there, has been much discussed of late. On the whole, judging from the attitude of newspapers generally, the Governor's action is regarded as commendable. This verdict, no doubt, is concurred in by the hapless men whose solitude the unoffending animal has been ordered to share. One thing is certain. That is that the Chief Executive of Maine is prompted only by the most generous and humane desires. He seeks, without intentionally sacrificing the freedom or happiness of a dog, to bring a measure of cheer into the lives of those who long for unselfish and genuine companionship. Men do not voluntarily estrange themselves from the better influences which surround them. The bitterest regret, no doubt, is in finding themselves without friends.

Who will say that there has not come to this sprightly collie the greatest opportunity for true service that any dog has ever enjoyed? Prison walls and grated windows do not make a prison for him. The most hardened criminal will be his friend and his occasional companion. The repentant offender will hail him as a sympathetic messenger from the world which has been shut away from him. He may not, by conscious effort, reform the derelict or turn the transgressor from his tortuous pathway. But it is not always by precepts or by exhortation that the light of hope is made to break through the dark clouds of despair. Salvation does not frequently, as many still suppose, come by such reflected processes. As men's thoughts are turned from hatred and revenge and the pursuit of their own selfish aims to better things the work of regeneration begins and goes forward.

Light is needed in the prisons. A dog may bring more of this than the self-seeking reformer whose conscience is no cleaner than that of those whom he pretends to serve. Hypocrisy is as patent to the wicked as to the just. No white collie has ever, so far as known, been accused of duplicity. His friendships are genuine. Governor Baxter's pet may be the pioneer in what may become a successful reform work in American prisons.

Editorial Notes

Much fun is made by those not fully appreciative of the subtleties of cricket concerning the interruptions for meals and the intervals between innings, etc., to all of which the dyed-in-the-wool onlooker appears oblivious as he sits through the long hours of a game. However, that the enthusiast does sometimes find the time hanging heavy on his hands is indicated by the recent publication of a cricket anthology, compiled, so a reviewer has explained, in such a form that it can be taken in the pocket to the ground and read there in "the gaps during which optimists put it about that the pitch is drying." Be that as it may, however, the book contains a statement concerning this British national game, which, while some may not consider it true, will interest all. It reads in part:

"Cricket is the greatest of all games. . . . Nowhere perhaps does proficiency count for so much, yet nowhere is proficiency so easily defeated by the accidents of weather or the state of the ground, or even the winning or losing of the toss; in no game is it so easy to make a mistake; in no game is the cost of a single mistake so dear."

Some two years ago the immigration authorities in the United States ruled, after much discussion pro and con, that journalism was a learned profession. Judge Lowell, just the other day in the federal court in Boston, Mass., decided, after a hearing, that silk-worm culture should similarly be classified. In consequence of this latter ruling, an Armenian who had been barred by the immigration authorities as in excess of the Turkish quota was admitted. The judge's comment at the time of his decision is worth a moment's thought. "If this is not considered a learned profession in the United States," he said, "it is high time that it was, so that men like this can be admitted." Such a statement looks like an interpretation of the law more according to the intent than the letter, and as such more of them would be welcome.

Sergeant Bengalee Joe, Monrovia, Liberia

We were making an official call on the chief engineer, when suddenly, through the somewhat stiff conversation characteristic of official calls, I heard from the servants' quarters on the ground floor the low drone in Negro voice and accent, "cat, cat," repeated over and over and over. The voice was unmistakably adult. Finally my pedagogical instincts could stand the suspense no longer, and I asked who was learning with such persistent earnestness to spell "cat."

"Oh, it's our messenger, Bengalee Joe," said the chief engineer. It seems that Joe had somewhere found an old Macmillan First Reader, and with the occasional help of a tolerant white "chief," here in Monrovia, and there on the trail, was making laborious progress mastering the rudiments of English. His ambition and perseverance were unbounded but his advance slow, because he had no method. It was a challenge to me. I had enjoyed helping him when I was a boy, and I was now a student to learn English. What an interesting experience now to work with a native African from the bush, a man of forty, perhaps, from a tribe nominally Muhammadan. Besides, I did not like the idle life I was leading. I suggested, therefore, that I help Joe.

The chief engineer sent for him. An interesting figure he was as he stood stiffly at salute—a sergeant of the frontier force of the little Republic of Liberia, West Africa. Very black, not tall; sturdy, erect as all of the force are, bare as to legs and feet, wearing shorts and a shirt of khaki, a belt of six yards of thin green cloth, into which, as a companion, he had held the further end, he had wound himself, and crowned with a fez of green, the official army cap. In the awful "pidgin English" which once I vowed I would not use to the blacks, but which I soon "slung" with the best of them, for my attempts at "good" English were entirely unintelligible to the boys, the chief engineer drew Joe out—his dream of some day speaking English, of going back to his people, the Mendis, and teaching them "book."

"Would you like teacher?" "No money pay," he answered. "But for nothing the American Missy help you, Sergeant." Perhaps never again shall I have a glance of such gratitude given me as flashed from Joe's eyes for the one fleeting moment he allowed himself to look at me. That second he became my friend.

The lessons began the next day and continued regularly except when the sergeant was on duty or was sent on official messages to one of the American commissioners in the bush. The natives do not know the word jungle—the back country is the bush. Joe was the most dependable, in fact, was entirely dependable, and the fleetest runner among the messengers. He always got to where he was sent and back in schedule time, regardless of whether swollen streams or elephants blocked his way.

It was a week before Joe would sit down for the lesson. That was not in his code when with the white Missy. On the other hand, it was two weeks before he would take off his cap during the lesson. That, I suppose, was his code when in uniform.

He brought each day a little slate carefully wrapped in paper, and a stub of slate pencil. I soon found that with the start he had, it would be better to continue his system of learning each word as an entity, not attempting combinations of sound. He seemed unable to distinguish between certain sounds, t and d, for instance, and m and n. True to type.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

The Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

Upon a white page the smallest blot is noticeable and repugnant, and similarly even the smallest error in the Monitor should not be permitted to pass uncorrected. In the Monitor of July 3, on page 19, "The Page of the Seven Arts," appears a special article concerning "Lord Mansfield's Reading Table," in which the writer speaks incidentally of the case of the Negro, James Somerset.

Quite inaccurately, the writer describes Somerset as "a runaway slave who managed to get to England and was there arrested." Three errors are contrived in this one paragraph. First, Somerset was not a runaway slave. He did not even try to run away. Secondly, he did not "manage" to get to England, but was brought there by his "master," Charles Stewart, Esq. Thirdly, he was not "arrested"; he was taken before the Lord Chief Justice upon a writ of habeas corpus from the ship upon which his master purposed transporting him back to the island of Jamaica. The facts are stated in the famous opinion pronounced by Lord Mansfield, so that there is no reason for error in any restatement of them.

The writer of the article referred to also overlooks the most notable and memorable feature of the Somerset case, the statement in Lord Mansfield's judicial opinion that "The air of England has long been too pure for a slave, and every man is free who breathes it." In the year 1772 this was a great spiritual discovery and only an unfeeling love of truth and justice could have perceived it and had the courage to announce it. The poet Cowper at once saw its significance and it furnished him with the inspiration of one of his happiest lines. Four years later the Declaration of Independence gave utterance to the same spirit of Truth and Love. Who can estimate how much Jefferson, the lawyer, was influenced by Mansfield, the great, fearless, liberty-loving judge? RAMUEL J. MACDONALD, Newark, N. J.

however, he soon learned to write very well, and how proud he was when he could indite, without copy, his name and address:

Sergeant Bengalee Joe, Monrovia, Liberia. I found that his taking lessons from the American Missy gave him great prestige among his soldier friends, and other natives. One day when the commissioner was in the bush, three days' journey from Monrovia, Joe had been sent ahead to the next village to make arrangements for the housing and care of the safari. When they approached the "half-town"—a settlement of half a dozen or more huts—they saw a crowd of new soldiers, and, as no intent, indeed, that they had no eyes for the newcomers—most unusual.

It was soon learned that Bengalee Joe, being a dog lover, had brought from his little First Reader, was the center of interest. An outstanding man he was to the simple minds of the natives because he could read from the white man's book. Whenever he went, he carried in a little leather bag slung over his shoulder, the reader guarded as carefully as were the Government messages, and they were too sophisticated to spring by the Jacquellins, messengers to and from the white commissioners in the interior were extremely important.

One morning Joe appeared at the legation where we were staying, with lagging step and a face wrinkled with grief. Someone had accidentally broken his slate. It was a tragedy. We tried paper and pencil, but they were too sophisticated for Joe's primitive taste, so we went on with the fragments of slate.

Joe soon discovered that I loved flowers. His leisure hours were few, but he was free, he would scold the bush for new blossoms, and if I could not discover that he had even a native name for them—they were all just "bush flowers" or "bush trees." Up to this time, his life had been spent in more strenuous pursuits than those for flowers. The uppermost thought was for "chop," as all West African Coastlers, black or white, call food. But by the time I left, Joe's bush-love, naturally extensive, but largely utilitarian, had expanded to include an interest in growing things other than rice and sugar.

His first gift—how natural it is to want to give—a little offering brought by a tribesman to him from his home village, five days' journey away, close to the border of Sierra Leone. It was a banana and a fan (tutu). The banana was tiny, but good, and the fan a charming one, round and really artistic, of raffia, accented with bits of grass, colored green and henna.

After I left Monrovia, I wrote a letter to Joe using as many words as I could, that he had learned in the reader, and thinking, of course, that he would take it to the commissioner, who was our mutual friend, to translate the words he could not read. But I learned later that his pride and joy at receiving a book—all writing is a book—of his very own "by big boat," was too great to wait the arrival of the commissioner from the interior. He had shown it to everyone he knew from the Kru village at Waterloo to the Executive Mansion on the Hill.

When the commissioner, who was our mutual friend, was to leave Liberia, Bengalee Joe, by a forced march, came into Monrovia from the border, but not finding this friend at the legation, he had a bit of Africa, truly a symbol of real friendship. M. F. W.

The World's Great Capitals

THE WEEK IN PARIS

By Cable from Monitor Bureau

Paris, July 30. THOUGH the Radical and Socialist party maintain an outward show of admiration for the conduct of Edouard Herriot during the London negotiations, it is obvious that a considerable number of the party is keenly disappointed by the weak bearing of their leader. There has been a constant necessity for urging the Prime Minister to adopt boldly those lines of policy which the party advocated when in opposition, namely an effort to create cordiality toward France, not only in America and Great Britain, but also in Germany. When M. Herriot returns there will probably be much plain speaking on the part of the other important figures in the party councils.

It is natural that there should be considerable discussion with regard to the fate of M. Herriot. From the beginning it was clear that unless he could, at the London Conference, obtain a real success from the French point of view, he would be in some jeopardy. It must not be forgotten that if in the Chamber he has a majority—a majority which, however, is liable at any time to break up—it is the Senate which is the real arbiter of the parliamentary situation. The Senate is sometimes a body of great importance in France, and sometimes of little importance; much depends upon the precise configuration of the Parliament. But in this Parliament it may be said unquestionably that the Senate is the dominating element, and as the Senate is, in its turn, dominated by M. Poincaré, there are difficult days still ahead of M. Herriot.

With regard to the attempt to get on terms with Russia to which M. Herriot was pledged, it is likely that there will be further delay. With this will in the world, it is impossible in the opinion of the French, to recognize the present Government of Russia until it has recognized its debts. It is not particularly insisted that Russia should pay either the pre-war debts or the debts incurred during the war, but it is impossible to ask less than the acknowledgment of the debts. Now this seems to be precisely what the Soviet Government is unable to do. Its doctrine forbids such a surrender, and thus there is a deadlock which to all appearances will not be readily broken.

Emile Loubet, a former President of the Republic and an old Parisian, is to leave the capital forever. He has decided to settle in his country house near Montclair, and he has given up his flat in the Boulevard St. Germain. It is an extraordinary thing that there are living today no fewer than five men who have held the highest post in the Republic: there are M. Loubet, Armand Fallières, M. Poincaré, M. Millerand and the present occupant of the Elysée, Raymond Dugumier. As the nominal period of office is seven years and the average age at which presidents are made is 60, this is a remarkable record. Nor is the record spoiled by the premature resignation of one of the presidents mentioned with the single exception of M. Millerand. Until M. Loubet was elected in 1899 no president had completed his term and had left the Elysée in a normal manner, but there was then a succession of presidents who were permitted to serve their seven years—Loubet, Fallières and Poincaré.

M. Loubet has a remarkable record. When he quitted the Elysée he had put in 30 years of political work, and his 18 years of retirement have been spent in the capital. He was a companion of Gambetta in his student days, and he was in the school during the Second Empire. He takes with him to Montclair many souvenirs of his career: there is the official portrait by Bonnat, the bust of Edward VII, the bronze statue of Alphonse XIII and innumerable other mementoes of the sovereigns whom he met during his period of office. Even during the recent presidential crisis M. Loubet was called into consultation, but his decision to take no further part in public life is now irrevocable.

It has been stated that the Olympic Games in Paris, although successful from the point of view of sport, have resulted in a financial loss. This statement is, however, disputed. Certainly the crowds which went to the new stadium at Colombes had to be almost entirely made up of the Paris tradesmen, they are complaining that the games did not bring as many people to Paris as they had been taught to expect, and many came specially for the games. It is possible that many other prospective visitors were kept away by the reports that Paris was already overcrowded.

It is in December that the Paris Motor Show, which is of growing importance, will be held. Moreover, on this occasion it will be of a specially comprehensive kind. Aircraft of all sorts will be on display, and it is expected that considerable progress will be registered. A good deal of faith is placed by many people in the helicopter, and experiments which are extremely interesting are proceeding with a view to its use in a serviceable machine. The French are devoting the greatest possible attention to the development of flying, and those who are in the know promise a number of surprises. At any rate, it is significant that such a large place should be given to aerial navigation in the motor show.

It would appear that there is a dispute about the biplane of most famous writers. There has been hitherto considerable uncertainty respecting the native village of Guy de Maupassant. By some Fécamp was regarded as his natal place, and by others as being in the department of Calvados, where so described. In point of fact, it is quite clear that he was born at the Chateau de Mirmeuil near Tourville-sur-Arques. It is therefore in the rank of the chateau that a bust will be erected to commemorate his work. A committee has been formed and it is hoped that it will proceed quickly with the task.

Particulars are given of the issue of short term Government bonds which has been decided by the Défense Nationale. It was in 1915 that recourse was first had to them, and as may be imagined, it was difficult to distribute them all over the country through the banks and Government offices. There was an enormous possibility of fraud. Nevertheless it is gratifying to learn that the accounts which have now been carefully checked show that there is no discrepancy, although an amount of 230,000,000 francs is involved. Only one case of fraud was reported by a temporary clerk, which was quickly discovered. The greater part of these 230,000,000 francs' worth of bonds was redeemed, and at the present time the total amount in circulation does not exceed 40,000,000 francs.

It is proposed to suppress all tramways cars in the center of the city. This is a sensible decision, for the congestion of traffic instead of being improved by the various measures which have been taken during the past year or two, appears to grow greater and greater. It is obvious that the existence of the trams and the lumbering vehicles which are restricted to a straight path in the busier thoroughfares, are incompatible with modern requirements. Therefore a quadrilateral area has been laid down and in this area no tramways will in future be permitted to run. On the other hand, the motor omnibuses will have their services increased.
